

Value (USS) (%) provided trunking Sustainable Seas Ltd Cape Verde, The Gambia and Sao Tomé and Principe 15% 1 Buro Happold World Bank (PROBLUE) 1.4.2022 to 30.12.2022 Acon Detailed description of project Type of services provided Sustainable Seas Ltd Provided Type of services provided The circular economy is a model of production and consumption that involves sharing, leasing, recycling and reusing materials and products for as long as possible. Which allows the life cycle of natural and processed materials to be extended and economy becomes regenerative in de- sign. Circularity contributes to the development of a more sustainable world however not all sustainability initiatives contribute to circularity. Marine plastics globally have become a worldwide environmental challenge, circular economy approaches can provide effective inter- ventions to reduce plastic production and use impacts on the environment in a sustainable way. The overall aim of this project was to understand the challenges to, and opportunities for, increasing circular economy strategies and practices, with particular focus on the tourism sector and single use plastics. The project was tounderstand the challenges to, and opportunities was funded by 'PROBLUE' which is a new multi-donor trust fund that supports the sustainable use of the oceans resources. The trust fund included 4 plilars that focus on fisheries, ocean pollution, ocean sectors and seascape management. This project falls under three out of the stainable coastal tourism, pillar two that addresses marine litter, pollution reduction and pre- vention. Finally pillar four that supports the growth of ocean sectors such as e	West Africa Circular and Resilient Tourism for Coastal Destinations (Cape Verde, Gambia and Sao Tome & Principe)
The Gambia and São Tomé and Principe Ltd (PROBLUE) 30.12.2022 Detailed description of project Type of services provided The circular economy is a model of production and consumption that involves sharing, leasing, recycling and reusing materials and products for as long as possible. Which allows the life cycle of natural and processed materials to be extended and economy becomes regenerative in de sign. Circularty contributes to the development of a more sustainable world however not all sustainability initiatives contribute to circularity. Marine plastics globally have become a worldwide environmental challenge, circular economy approaches can provide effective inter- ventions to reduce plastic, rular commy approaches can provide effective inter- ventions to reduce plastic, succeas netword the callenges to, and opportunities for, increasing circular economy strategies and practices, with particular focus on the tourism sector and single use plastics. The project was implemented as part of the World Bank Group's, 'Sustainable and Resilient Tourism on Small Islands and in Coastal Destinations'. The project was funded by 'PROBLUE' which is a new multi-door trust fund that supports the sustainable use of the oceans resources. The trust fund included 4 pillars that focus on fisheries, ocean pollution, ocean sectors and seascape management. This project falls under three out of the four pillars. The first being pillar three that supports the growth of ocean sectors such as sus- tainable coastal tourism, pillar two that addresses marine litter, pollution reduction and pre- vention. Finally pillar four that supports financial innovation for integrated seascape manage- ment. The project activities were piloted in three western Africa countries: Cabo Verde, The It during in the contries face in transitioning to a cintegrated seascape management. Thi	Name of legal entity	Country		out by candidate		Name of client		Dates (start/end)	Name of partners if any
The circular economy is a model of production and consumption that involves sharing, leasing, recycling and reusing materials and products for as long as possible. Which allows the life cycle of natural and processed materials to be extended and economy becomes regenerative in design. Circularity contributes to the development of a more sustainable world however not all sustainability initiatives contribute to circularity. Marine plastics globally have become a worldwide environmental challenge, circular economy approaches can provide effective interventions to reduce plastic production and use impacts on the environment in a sustainable way . The overall aim of this project was to understand the challenges to, and opportunities for, increasing circular economy strategies and practices, with particular focus on the tourism sector and single use plastics. The project was implemented as part of the World Bank Group's, 'Sustainable and Resilient Tourism on Small Islands and in Coastal Destinations'. The project sincularies communities for increase management. This project falls under three out of the four pillars. The first being pillar three that supports the growth of ocean sectors such as sustainable coastal tourism, pillar two that addresses marine litter, pollution reduction and prevention. Finally pillar four that supports financial innovation for integrated seascape management. The project activities were piloted in three western Africa countries: Cabo Verde, The	ustainable Seas Ltd	The Gambia and São Tomé		15%	1				Acorn Consulting Ltd
recycling and reusing materials and products for as long as possible. Which allows the life cycle of natural and processed materials to be extended and economy becomes regenerative in de- sign. Circularity contributes to the development of a more sustainable world however not all sustainability initiatives contribute to circularity. Marine plastics globally have become a worldwide environmental challenge, circular economy approaches can provide effective inter- ventions to reduce plastic production and use impacts on the environment in a sustainable way . The overall aim of this project was to understand the challenges to, and opportunities for, increasing circular economy strategies and practices, with particular focus on the tourism sector and single use plastics. The project was implemented as part of the World Bank Group's, 'Sustainable and Resilient Tourism on Small Islands and in Coastal Destinations'. The project was funded by 'PROBLUE' which is a new multi-donor trust fund that supports the sustainable use of the oceans resources. The trust fund included 4 pillars that focus on fisheries, ocean pollution, ocean sectors and seascape management. This project falls under three out of the four pillars. The first being pillar three that supports the growth of ocean sectors such as sus- tainable coastal tourism, pillar two that addresses marine litter, pollution reduction and pre- vention. Finally pillar four that supports financial innovation for integrated seascape manage- ment. The project activities were piloted in three western Africa countries: Cabo Verde, The	Detailed description of project					Type of services provided Gambia, and São Tomé and Príncipe. The project scope focused on how a shift towards a cir- cular economy in these three countries at national and tourism-sector levels can be made and how it can benefit and improve the tourism sector.	The circular economy is a model of production and consumption that involves sharing, leasing, recycling and reusing materials and products for as long as possible. Which allows the life cycle of natural and processed materials to be extended and economy becomes regenerative in design. Circularity contributes to the development of a more sustainable world however not all sustainability initiatives contribute to circularity. Marine plastics globally have become a worldwide environmental challenge, circular economy approaches can provide effective interventions to reduce plastic production and use impacts on the environment in a sustainable way . The overall aim of this project was to understand the challenges to, and opportunities for, increasing circular economy strategies and practices, with particular focus on the tourism sector and single use plastics. The project was implemented as part of the World Bank Group's, 'Sustainable and Resilient Tourism on Small Islands and in Coastal Destinations'. The project was funded by 'PROBLUE' which is a new multi-donor trust fund that supports the sustainable use of the oceans resources. The trust fund included 4 pillars that focus on fisheries, ocean pollution, ocean sectors and seascape management. This project falls under three out of the four pillars. The first being pillar three that supports the growth of ocean sectors such as sustainable coastal tourism, pillar two that addresses marine litter, pollution reduction and prevention. Finally pillar four that supports financial innovation for integrated seascape management. The project activities were piloted in three western Africa countries: Cabo Verde, The Gambia, and São Tomé and Príncipe. The project scope focused on how a shift towards a circular economy in these three countries at national and tourism-sector levels can be made and					 LTD) to achieve the following tasks: Circular economy gap analysis, which aimed to analyse material flows in SIDS to identify high impact areas in terms of reduction of material inputs and optimisation of the islands resource. Tourism sector circular economy gaps analysis and opportunity identification (including links to marine planning and blue economies). Tourism sector firm audits-(per nation) - production a technical and economic circular economy assessment of specific firms in the tourism industry. Market sizing study for circular economy products in the tourism sector-development of a data-driven analysis of the size of the market for circular economy products including single use plastic alternatives. Recommendations and opportunities for increased circular economic practices for tourism sector. In each nation Institutional and regulatory gap analysis and roadmap for a circular economy transition—consolidation of results and highlight the main targeted challenges that the countries face in transitioning to a circular economy. 				